Dear Jim: You may as well know immediately. I have just heard (6:15 p.m.) that our great and good friend the Blabber has blabbed enough and Cyril and Bob are jumping on a tortured interpretation of the transcript in our book in a piece in a coming issue of Modern Medicine. Consider the possibility that I use an appearance to clobber the uneriginals and lay them out once and for all. Centrovery helps sell books. And nobody deserves a good dose more richly. My understanding is that they are trying to make misuse, politically, of Ford's absence. And using the medical stuff only. How come that genius of a CTIA director of research never found this in the countless other available ways? Who needs enemies when we have the kinds of friends we share? I'll be silent. I ask only consider. National Star man called. Coming tomorrow. MW 11/6/74
